

Notebooks, B.F. Skinner A Referenced Index of Entries Relevant to Verbal Behavior

Notebooks, B.F. Skinner is an edited collection of B.F. Skinner's notes, originally written between 1956 and 1978, addressing a wide range of issues. Among the 687 titled entries are a considerable number of notes which reflect Skinner's continuing interest in the analysis of verbal behavior. As a thematically related group, those notes provide a number of analyzed examples, elaborations, and extensions of the functional account of language presented in Verbal Behavior (Skinner, 1957). While Notebooks can be read simply "for enjoyment," it also can be regarded as a source of material which is supplementary to Verbal Behavior.

The following index is an effort to assist readers interested in relating material from Notebooks and Verbal Behavior. Although both books contain topic indices, this referencing is intended to allow the reader to more quickly and more specifically locate points of correspondence between the two books. The general aim in compiling the index was to include all Notebooks entries which are relevant to Verbal Behavior, and 282 of the entries met this general criterion in one or more respects. Many entries consist of analyzed examples of verbal behavior (often Skinner's own), and were referenced to passages in which similar examples or analyses appear.

The index was composed in partial payment of an intellectual debt to Jack Michael, whose comments and encouragement during preparation of the index were much appreciated. I am also indebted to a valued verbal community for their support and suggestions. Special thanks are due Alyce Dickinson, Bruce Hesse, Mike Minervini, Hank Schlinger, and Mark Sundberg. Any idiosyncrasies in the index, however, are solely those of the author. Comments on the cross-referencing are welcome, and should be sent to the author, Community Re-Entry Services of Michigan, Inc., 216 St. Mary's Lake Road, Battle Creek, MI 49017.

Other entries are commentaries on, or extensions of, Skinner's treatment of particular issues in Verbal Behavior. For most of these, a direct relation seemed apparent and provided the basis for reference. But a number of other entries not clearly in either of the above categories warranted inclusion on the basis of other features. For example, some entries involving analyses of nonverbal behavior seem to point out useful comparisons with verbal behavior, and were included for that reason. Finally, some entries are observations and comments which are relevant to topics in Verbal Behavior even though the relation is less direct (or, as Skinner might say, the intraverbal linkage is merely longer). For these entries, the references passage is enclosed in parentheses.

The index is in two parts. In the first part, Notebooks entries are listed with specific passages in Verbal Behavior to which each entry is related. The second part of the index is a listing of various Verbal Behavior sections by chapter and relevant Notebooks material. Thus, for a particular Notebooks entry the reader can refer to corresponding sections of Verbal Behavior by consulting the first part of the index. For a specific passage or section of Verbal Behavior, related entries in Notebooks can be located using the second part.

All text material is denoted according to a two-part numbering format. A Notebooks entry is indicated by its page number and its ordinal position on that page. For example, Notebooks 69.2 refers to the second titled entry beginning on page 69 ("Precious Prose"). (Entry titles are included in the first part of the index for readers who might benefit from a formal prompt in locating particular entries.) Verbal Behavior material is cited by page and paragraph number. Thus VB 177,2 directs the reader to the second paragraph beginning on page 177. A notation such as 42,0 indicates that the relevant section is the material at the top of page 42 which precedes paragraph 42,1. If one or more paragraphs subsequent to the cited paragraph are relevant, an "f" is appended to the notation (e.g., 44,2f). More extended passages (such as titled chapter subsections or entire chapters) are denoted by "ff" (e.g., 362,1ff refers to the section in chapter 14 titled "Instructions and Knowledge"). In many cases there are multiple citations for a particular Notebooks entry or Verbal Behavior section. Multiple citations are ordered by page number.
